NATIONAL REPUBLICAN.

For the National Republican SONG. Air-" America.

if country! let this year To thee be one of cheer, Throughout its course, That, in its circling round, America has found At home, on her own ground, True freedom's source.

Let all mankind rejoice, And each one raise his voice To God above. His country has awaked, And tyrant thrones have quaked— Demons their haunts forsaked. The world does move.

Send forth the welcome sound To earth's remotest bound— We will be free. We'll rend the captive's chain, And make oppression vain; We'll fight, with might and main, For liberty.

Then to the breach, ye men True patriots, again Give them a shot. This time teach them that might Accompanies the right, and, in high Heaven's sight, We fear them not. M. C. S.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

THE PRINCE JEROME NAPOLEON.

HIS ARRIVAL IN NEW YORK-HIS SUITE. Seldom has a foreign vessel brought to our shores such a cargo of celebrities as are now an board the yacht of Prince Napoleon, off the foot of Morris street, Pier No. 4, North river. In the first placethere is Prince Napoleon him-self—fat, fair, and we may add forty, but that his robustness seems rather to belong to a man who has always lived well and imperturbably, without regard to coups d'etat or the facts of the Patterson-Bonaparte trial. He is a man who would anywhere be called good looking, about five feet eight feet in stature, with a de cided Napoleonic features, wearing a summer suit of lipen and straw hat, like any of our hourgeois gentilhommes," and appearing decidedly popular among his officers.

His Princess, Madame Clotilde, is a very preposessing lady, of Italian complexion and teatures, of middle height and most unassuming manners, who evidently has not suffered ming manners, who evidently has not suffered from a sea voyage of several weeks from Tou-lon. If we should see the Princess in our streets we should call her a pretty little refugee from some metropolitan boarding school, see-ing "Spingler" written in all her girlish and un-affected behavior, but not in the ardent olive face and dark brown hair which, under a flat, shows to too striking advantage to have submitted to "retiring bell" rules, and the discipline of the school-room. Her figure is petite, very graceful, and clothed in the ordinary gray travelling habit of the lady-like voya

The Princess's first maid of honor, the Duch ess d'Abrantes, is quite young—apparently not over eighteen—very pretty, and similarly dress-

Among the guests of the Prince we notice two colonels of the Empire, M. Ragon and M. Ferri Pisani, both of them aides-de-camp. Also the former Governor of the island of Gus daloupe, now a commander in the French navy, M. Bonfils, who somewhat resembles our Amerfeatures; but save in these, white hair, military cap and manner, differing from him, as he is only a little above the middle height. He is a very handsome old gentleman, and it is easy to believe that he has borne abundant honors, both under the kingdom and the em

The last of the guests of Prince Jerome is M. Maurice Sand, the son of the celebrated authoress of Consucto, a quiet, courtly, and hand-some young man, who speaks English remarkcolors, Stedman, only elevated on rather long-or underpinning.

The commander of the vessel is M. Georgette ie Buisson, a handsome young Frenchman ap-parently of thirty, who also speaks English well and has a most perfect knowledge of his profesnion, through long experience in the service The other officers are Lieutenant Brecque, M Brunet, an ensign and artillery officer of the ship; Ensign Arago, nephew of the great astronomer; Ensign de la Gueronnière—son of the senator newly appointed from the Parisian editorial ranks; M. Orange, general manager or purser; Surgeon Bérenger, and Chief-Engineer Monnier.

The yacht is a handsome vessel of six bun dred tons, painted black, with an engine of two hundred and fifty horse-power (French) moving a propeller. The most noticeable fact about rig is that the three masts are each an or tire spar, not jointed at the cross-trees, or with a top gallant and royal mast, as is the case in per vessels. Moreover, the prince having be come enamored of the Great Eastern system has arranged a set of telegraphic wires running from the wheel and engine to indices in hi

The Prince's colors are green. Accordingly ce has a green morocco lounge in his cabine deak of the same material and color, a bed chamber hung likewise, and a similar dispos tion of tints in his mess-room and all his officers' cabins.

He is a great admirer of Egyptian antiqui-ties—is the prince. A fine bronze statuette of one of the most famous mummies of Belzoni is on a shelf in his cabinet, and the ornaments about his drawers, his bell-calls, his whole pri-vate toilette-room and bed chamber, are in the old Sesostrian style. The whole cabin arrangements of the Prince The whole cabin arrangements of the are moderated and his suite, both guests and officers, are models of comfort. The ventilation of the berthrooms is both admirably scientific and simple.

All the apparatus of this department is likewise in green, the porcelain bearing the Prince's initials.

As is natural, portraits of Napoleon I. are everywhere visible—bufts, and remembrances of his battles. Among other adornments of the princely apartments are two double bar-relled rifles, magnificently mounted, the jew-elled sword which he wears as one of the Emthe Bey of Tunis, perfectly studded with diamonds along its hilt and scabbard.

The Prince will remain here a fortnight at least, most of the time travelling with the Princes will remain here a fortnight at least, most of the time travelling with the Princes and suite through the interior.
